FOOD FOR THOUGHT: Do Your Best and Don't Worry

As a youth minister in a Victorian parish, I spend four years working in a small community that was not blessed with more than a handful of Sunday Mass lectors. Every year it seemed that the same lector was scheduled to read on Pentecost. As sincere, devout, and well-intentioned as he was, there was no way he was capable of pronouncing correctly the names of the areas from which the Jewish people travelled in the first reading from the Acts of the Apostles. He wouldn't even try. He'd see the first few letters and off he'd go into more familiar territory. So Parthians became "part-timers". Mesopotamia became Minnesota. Cappadocia became Cappuccino. And Cretans became Croatians. He created his own fantasy world. You could not doubt his good intentions or faith even as you smiled and then laughed at his reading.

I ran into him some years later. His family was all grown. He and his wife moved to another parish where they both became involved. I had to ask him if he was still a lector. He gave me a big smile and told me that he gave it up long ago. Innocently he said it just wasn't one of his "gifts".
